He was raised by Tony and Joanne to know that the most important thing you can have in life is the love and support of your family. The foundation and measure of the success of a person's life at the end of their days is the kindness and love they put out into the world. Tony was the epitome of all that is good and kind in this world. He was beloved by his in-laws, Hugh and Erlinda. He held them close in his love after the loss of their son, and quickly became not only a pillar in the Brophy family but in the Brennan family as well.
